A tertiary care hospital in a developing country. All patients who had esophageal perforations treated between 1987 and 2001 were evaluated. There were 19 cases. Most were due to infections (15) and followed thoracotomy (5). Five fistulas (26%) were due to tumor. The esophageal perforation was diagnosed at an average of 8 days post-intervention (range 1-30 days). All perforations were secondary to penetrating trauma; the mean length of stay was 10.8 days (range 2-34 days). There was a mortality rate of 26% due to respiratory sepsis. Fourteen patients (74%) underwent surgical intervention, including 13 esophagoplasties, 1 gastrostomy, and 1 repair of a tracheoesophageal fistula. Percutaneous drainage of a cervical abscess was performed in 2 patients. Morbidity was documented in 4 patients (21%), and 3 died (16%) due to complications of respiratory sepsis.
