Take a look through a transparent screen. In front of you you will see a realtime clock counting down, and in the center you will see an FPS counter. What is behind the screen is a realtime graphic engine rendered on a GPU. The engine generates space ships, ships with compartments, stations with equipment, a city, or any other object. Since there is absolutely no artificial look, the graphics look as if they were downloaded from the Dead Space universe. You may navigate through each space station, enter each compartment, or simply stand in the middle of the screensaver and look at the galactic night in silence. Space Trip 3D Screensaver is a nifty screensaver that takes you through space when your PC is idle. It feels like it's part of a game or a movie. Space stations, battleships, intergalactic vortexes, and realistic planet surfaces are the bread and butter of this screensaver. On top of that, eerie sound effects are accompanying this particular trip to space. There's an FPS counter and a clock on the screen which has no impact on your resources, making the experience smooth and silent. You get the sensation that you're in the depths of space or on a spaceship going to the next galaxy. Space Trip 3D Screensaver is a 3D screensaver that takes you through space when your computer is idle. It feels like it's part of a game or a movie. Space stations, battleships, intergalactic vortexes, and realistic planet surfaces are the bread and butter of this screensaver. On top of that, eerie sound effects are accompanying this particular trip to space. In the screensaver settings, you can choose to enable a clock and an FPS counter. The clock uses images from the worlds of Dead Space, and the FPS counter represents the number of frames per second that the screen is running at. To install this screensaver, it is best to download the screen-saver archive in ISO format.
