After taking place once, the New Zealand Māori Party is closing its doors for good. Prime Minister John Key confirmed this morning that the party's only sitting MP, Marama Fox, would not be standing in the next election. Dr Fox was named last month as the Māori Party's candidate for the seat of Te Tai Hauāuru, but that was as good as it got for the party as it struggled to gain the support of iwi and other Māori groups. MARAMA FOX The Māori Party's only MP. The party was officially registered in 2008 and drew 3.3 per cent support at the election in 2011. Māori Party leaders Eru Rau and Willie Jackson announced last month that the party would be closing its doors after the 2017 election, but Dr Fox's candidacy was a last-minute development. Key said it was disappointing to see the party, which supported the Māori seats Act, to shut its doors. "I don't think it's right that the Māori Party has closed shop after just a couple of years. I think it's a pretty clear demonstration of what happens when you don't compromise and work with other people, and I think the Māori people are generally pretty happy with the level of participation they've got." The Māori Party's only MP Marama Fox is giving up the seat. Key said he wasn't sure whether there would be another party in the Māori seats in future but hoped there was. "I'd like to see it continue." Māori Party chairman Willie Jackson said this morning that Simple yet novice-friendly GUI The program comes with a very basic user interface, its main functions being evident right away, even to the most inexperienced of individuals. A text field indicates the path of the targeted file while the main screen displays the results of the analysis. It may not score points for originality, but Torch Password Recovery is unlikely to pose difficulty for anyone, so you can quickly retrieve both username and access keys to the websites you visit most frequently. Swift credentials recovery from Torch Browser You should note that in order for the application to be able to retrieve any data from your system, you need to have logged in to your accounts through Torch Browser, allowing it to memorize them, otherwise it significantly decreases the chances of recovering them. Upon launching Torch Password Recovery, it immediately detects and loads the correct file path to the document that stores all this data. However, you also have the possibility of manually indicating it. Once you press the 'Show Passwords' button, the utility will quickly display the corresponding information (website, username/email, and password). For safe keeping, it even provides you with the option to generate a report, storing the data in a TXT, HTML, XML or CSV file. Regain access to online accounts in no time In closing, Torch Password Recovery is a practical and efficient application that you can resort to if you find yourself incapable of remembering your login details for your website accounts, enabling you to retrieve them in just a few swift mouse clicks.Q: How to get a modal dialog to appear on a button click? I have a JButton that when clicked will open a JDialog. I have a class that extends AbstractAction so that it can contain a value and a label. The problem I have is that I want this button to open a dialog that contains this button. The current button is the one that can be clicked to open the modal dialog. But I can't seem to get it to work. This is what I have.

public class Test extends AbstractAction { / Creates new form TestForm */ public Test() {
 this.setCaption("Test");
 this.setToolTipText("Test");
 public void actionPerformed(ActionEvent e)
