

Standard Desktop Clock-7 Description: Our pick: This would be the ideal clock widget for those times when you just want to bring your attention back to the date or the time, or when you just need to keep tabs on some mundane task, such as cooking or dealing with the dishes. However, note that it does not support additional features, such as setting alarms or reminders. It will display a simple analog clock and support adjusting a few parameters, such as setting it always to be on top of other windows or displaying its second hand. Additionally, it will be available on your desktop as a clock widget and can be dragged to move it anywhere on your screen, but note that moving it fast can cause the widget to get dropped if you do not want it to be restored to its original location. Note that Standard Desktop Clock-7 supports only Windows XP, Vista and 7. Remaining money shown in the tray icon For instance, if you plan to watch a YouTube video and you are running low on your cellular data limit, you can add “5mb/hour” to the remaining money portion of the icon. In other words, if you’re running low on your cellular data limit, the adTuner icon will show the remaining amount in megabytes instead of the remaining time. AdTuner has a very limited feature set, but it can still be useful if you just want to be reminded to refill your mobile data plan before it runs out. It can also be useful if you want to track your cellular data usage and remind you to refill your plan. Three available ads The tool offers three different ads and you can easily select one of them by clicking on the desired thumbnail. However, if you ever want to change them, you will have to reset them by clicking on the AdTuner icon. Customizable ad Apart from selecting your ad, you can also customize it by selecting the “Customize” button. This will open the “Ad Customization” window, where you can change a number of things, such as the size and transparency of the background.
