EU spokesman Christian Carstensen said on Monday the EU's executive arm the European Commission had informed the World Health Organisation (WHO) of its decision. "At present the European Union does not consider that the circumstances of this case pose any threat for the EU's consumers," Carstensen told AFP, adding that there was no evidence the contaminated fruit had reached the EU market. The EU is the biggest banana buyer in the world after the United States. The decision, which is aimed at ensuring the safety of the bloc's consumers, came as new figures showed the European Commission had so far removed from its Brussels headquarters 1,200 tonnes of bananas and 1,600 tonnes of plantains since the outbreak of the mosquito-borne virus in Brazil on February 1. 'No danger' EU health commissioner Vytenis Andriukaitis told a news conference the bananas from the United States were sold under the Cote D'Ivoire importer "Bimbo" brand and were grown in Latin American countries affected by Zika, notably Brazil.
