The wait is almost over, as developer Rockstar has revealed the first gameplay trailer for the game's online mode. As you can see, the mode follows the same format as the game's single player mode. You play as three different characters (fugitive with a price on your head, a driver who seeks a career change, or a soldier who's trying to make sense of the chaos around him), who all have their own motivations for wanting to pull off the heists. In traditional Rockstar fashion, GTA V's online mode has a flexible structure, and lets you decide how your criminal activities unfold. You can use cars, motorcycles, and vans to ferry your team between locations, but you can also use any of the game's weapons to dole out retribution to anyone who gets in your way. There's also the chance to use firearms while roaming, though special powers can also be used to create special effects. While the rest of the world talks about the new Kinect sensors and the revamped stereoscopic 3D technology in the Xbox One, developers at Rockstar have their sights set on the business of crime, and the online gameplay – though it's not clear if that includes bringing Grand Theft Auto V to the next-gen console.
