Based on the RPG maker program that has "RPG Maker MV" as its latest model. RPG Maker MV has never been released in Japan. More PostsThe present invention relates to a scanning optical system, and more particularly to a scanning optical system in which incident light is subjected to wavelength conversion by a non-linear optical crystal and the light to be used for exposure is subjected to scanning by a deflector. Conventionally known are a system of simultaneously exposing an original and a photosensitive material to form an image, a system of optically scanning an original and a photosensitive material with high accuracy, and a system of exposing only a photosensitive material to form an image. The latter system is recently attracting attention since the photosensitive material does not have to be exposed to an excessive amount of light. For the system of exposing only the photosensitive material to form an image, an image formation apparatus employing a beam scanning optical system is being developed in recent years. FIGS. 1A and 1B illustrate a scanning optical system of an image formation apparatus using a deflector. In FIGS. 1A and 1B, an original 211, an illumination system 213, a half-mirror 214, a non-linear optical crystal 215, a deflector 216, and a photosensitive material 217 are arranged in this order from the side of a scanning start point. Deflectors 216a and 216b are disposed between the non-linear optical crystal 215 and the photosensitive material 217. An optical beam emitted from the illumination system 213 is deflected by the deflector 216a, and is then subjected to wavelength conversion by the non-linear optical crystal 215. The light subjected to wavelength conversion is reflected by the deflector 216b, passes through the non-linear optical crystal 215, is deflected by the deflector 216a, passes through the non-linear optical crystal 215 again, and is then radiated onto the photosensitive material 217. The light reflected by the original 211 passes through the non-linear optical crystal 215 twice. In FIGS. 1A and 1B, a scanning optical system is formed by a combination of the deflectors 216a and 216b and the non-linear optical crystal 215. In the image formation apparatus with the above-described scanning optical system, in order to increase throughput, the time taken to scan the photosensitive material 217 should be reduced. From this point of view, the number of times the optical beam from the illumination system 213 is subjected to wavelength conversion by the

and Miniatures. Red Coats and Guns, a delight for History Lovers! Menu Damnation Acherby Damnation Acherby: Alderman Hubert "Hugh the Butcher" Piggley is known for many things, not least amongst them being the wife beating that disfigured him so badly. But Hugh would not be the character of the blog, so I am skipping that story for now. Instead I will be talking about a few of the other characters from Acherby, and give a follow up to the story of a rather 'well known person' from my first post - Hoat the Great. Hoat was a true man of the people, a companion of the 'glittern', for he shared their fondness of a good drink, and often found himself deep in debt. When the rumour started circulating (and as Hoat liked a good tale well told), that an entire body of disgruntled Aldermen were going to assault the Tolbooth and kill its Warden, he rubbed his hands gleefully and agreed to sell his house, and take up a life of crime. Many nights of drink later he was on his way to murder his enemies. Little did he know that he was about to set in motion a chain of events that would devastate both him, and the nearest town. On the evening of the attack, Hoat was on his way to where his target lived. It was a fine September evening, with a brisk wind blowing from the west, and the sun was just setting. He was in high spirits, and with good reason. He had not slept in three days. His mission had started to go badly. An incident at the Tolbooth had resulted in the arrest of his close friend, and furthermore Hoat had made a bigger ass of himself than usual on the local community. As such, the sensible thing would have been to run away, but instead he had taken it in to his head to have a night out drinking. He was also a bit sick of being a victim. For a few years he had been kicked and beaten unconscious by policeman simply because they could, and the thought of landing in prison was not appealing. The thought of retiring for the evening had no weight on him, as Hoat had a very good reason for calling at that hour and place - he was meeting his cousin, who was staying there, and was expected this evening. He was impatient, for

The game is based on an oldschool 2d game with a pirate-theme. The game is very fast-paced and has no slow-down. The enemies are slow and you have to look out for them. Be careful - they will grab you, throw you in the air and smash you against the wall. There will be no mercy for you. Key Features: - 4 Player Multiplayer - Various weapon types - High-scoreboards and achievements - Controller support - Multiplayer with different play modes like Deathmatch and Capture The FlagQ: Is there a size/weight disadvantage to having enormous, over-sized weapons? If you have any crazy characters/monsters that can wield insanely large weapons, say, a sword or a pair of giant goggles, can they actually be overpowered in fights? While having a massive weapon wouldn't grant you much of an advantage over a normal opponent, it seems counter intuitive to balance it out with a -1 strength if you had to fight someone using a child-sized weapon. A: The weight is just a factor in balance, it has no effect on dmg. I mean, the rules allow you to use a sword weighing more than 10kg, and that sword can do the same dmg that a regular shortsword can do (which is I guess 1 ton). Now, one thing to take into account when the weapon is big and heavy is that it lowers the range at which it can be used. Even if the monster has a great reach, for some reason, it may be just a too hard to hit and that would be a problem. But usually the monsters have 20ft reach and thus, if the weapon can be used for that range (on average), the monster can end the day with 6 blows while the player only has 3. Now, if a monster is big enough, even if it's short, it can hit twice the distance of its reach, and thus, it will deal 2 dmg for each of its swings (with a big enough monster). The monster is more skilled with the sword, it can use a special swing/smash and kill easily. The other thing to take in consideration is that big and heavy weapons actually drag the monster, thus it won't be an agile beast that can move easily. This is probably not a problem for some games, like D&D. A: Doesn't the weight increase the force applied to your swing?
