$("#myToggle").on('click', function(){
    $("#boxes").toggleClass('fadeIn').toggleClass('fadeOut'); });

I would like to remove one of the classes and show it by itself, I have been trying to add to the class line:

$("#myToggle").on('click', function(){ $
    $("#boxes").toggleClass('fadeIn').toggleClass('fadeOut').addClass('margin'); });

 But this seems to not be working and I cannot figure out why.

A: `.addClass()` only adds the class, it doesn't remove an existing class..`.removeClass()` removes the existing class if it exists. Also, you could write:

$("#myToggle").on('click', function() {
    $("#boxes").toggleClass('fadeIn fadeOut'); });

 if you want to keep `fadeIn` and `fadeOut` both in the classList. A survey of the smoking habits of a group of ophthalmic nurses. Twenty-four percent of the 400 ophthalmic nurses surveyed at two major eye clinics in the Western United States were smokers. When asked to list their major causes for smoking, over 25% gave the answer that the main reason was because of bad cough. A number of means of cigarette smoking were discussed, and the overwhelming opinion among the nurses was that they would stop smoking cigarettes if given the opportunity.

While a majority of the nurses did not want to be taught how to smoke, they did want to know the harmful effects of smoking. The nurses expressed an increased interest in the problem of smoking
