After the Play Store went down for maintenance yesterday, Google pushed an update to its own Home app that includes a new feature that gives users a quick and easy way to see the name of the currently running app or app that is running in the background. When the Play Store was down yesterday, Google didn't have much of an Android app catalogue to offer up, but now that the missing service has been restored, Google has issued an update to its own app to make this sort of thing easier. The update to Home now allows users to see the name of the app running in the background or in the foreground with the tap of a button. Hit the source link to see the update in action and be sure to check out the video below, as well.

6.1..Stereochemistry of radiation-induced DNA lesions analyzed with high performance liquid chromatography. The products of DNA-specific damage in the form of single-strand breaks were separated into three different base series by reversed-phase high performance liquid chromatography and their stereochemical configurations were examined. The first series was composed of pyrimidine nucleosides and the second series consisted of purine nucleosides. The third series was made up of the glycosylated and the nucleoside-free deoxyribonucleosides. The use of sodium cholate as a detergent was essential for the resolution of the anomeric mixture of deoxyribonucleosides and base-labile compounds. Utilization of (-)-ephedrine as a resolving agent yielded bases that were eluted after a smaller retention time than those obtained from (+)-ephedrine, suggesting that the beta anomeric configuration was the adduct of the nitrogen mustard. In addition, a technique to obtain functional information on the chemical nature of the DNA damage was developed by the addition of chemically modified deoxyribonucleosides. The result was a better resolution of the epimeric mixture of deoxyribonucleoside and base-labile products.

Q: How to create a new directory structure on my Linux server? I have a working copy of Subversion installed on a production Linux server. Now, I want to move my working copy into a new directory structure on that server. I read that I should make a copy of my working copy, move my working copy into the new directory structure, then delete my working copy, then I should move my working copy into the new directory structure. Would that work? Are there any other suggestions

Even though I personally hate diamonds, I know that there are a lot of dishonest people out there who use them as a way to defraud the government of those taxes that they are supposed to pay on those.

While many countries and organizations classify diamonds as precious stones, the value of diamonds by weight are essentially the same within the industry. The value of a stone with a carat weight of five or six is approximately the same as one with a carat weight of one, albeit that the value is more of a blue chip gem (and thus more rare) versus a junker gemstone.

Diamonds are mined in various forms: rough, polished, natural, and synthetic. Rough diamonds are taken from the earth and are more likely to have problems and flaws.

A typical cut diamond, if it were sold for cash, would be worth on the order of $100 or $200. The value of a natural diamond may be roughly the same as a rough diamond, although natural diamonds are usually less valuable because of possible defects.

Diamonds are evaluated for diamonds just like any other gemstone, and so it's a good idea to have them evaluated by a reliable, well-established dealer who understands diamonds and who has good contact within the industry. Now, how do you go about dealing with an undercover cop who is basically trying to steal your diamonds? The advice of the police officer is one thing, but a little bit of advice on the subject of giving jewelry away to people and places that are known to be corrupt may be another. However, you may have to take a stab at doing something like this if your dealer refuses to listen. Even though it's a very brief piece of advice, it's a good idea to have a policy or written procedure in place
