Tons of people are still waiting for addons to be back up.Q: Is there any way to persist a ThreadPoolExecutor used in a Java Application? The problem is I have a java application which interacts with webservices using google app engine (java). The google app engine(java) uses jdk1.6(epoc) as a virtual machine. The application uses google app engine datastore to store some user data. The application does the operation on its own thread pool. But every time i deploy the application and run it its creating a new thread pool. At the same time the user data is being loaded into the datastore by the app engine. My need is user data should be loaded by the app engine (datastore) should stay the same every time the application is deployed. But so far my research has led me to nowhere. Please can any one provide a solution to this issue. A: You can use the Web application's servlet context to store a ThreadPoolExecutor, the servlet container will restart it when it runs. If you don't use servlets, or use web.xml, it should be possible to save it in your configuration file. Or use Spring? A: You can use Spring framework (or use java config) to create a bean using ThreadPoolExecutor. I have no idea why you are using a thread pool in the first place, as most of the interactions with service should be done in an asynchronous way. $t \, n \, b \, e \, (\, 1 \, 2 \, / \, (\, - \, 7 \,) \,) \, / \, (\, (\, - \, 3 \,) \, / \, 7 \,) \, . \, L \, e \, t \, o \, (\, y \,)$
