AnChris Bohm Special for USA TODAY Sports FINAL: Hamilton 17, Rosberg 14 SWITZERLAND — Fernando Alonso became the third driver of the 2014 Formula One season to confirm their intention to move to the sport's new team- and constructor-split system — amid speculation the Spaniard could be in line for a seat at McLaren. "I have not announced anything yet," the Spaniard told reporters in Geneva this weekend. "But certainly I will be there next year." Alonso's comments are in stark contrast to those made by his team, who have remained steadfast in their refusal to confirm or deny the future of the once-estimated world champion, despite both McLaren and Ferrari insisting the official word on a 2014 driver has yet to be given. Alonso's words could also have ramifications for Red Bull, which McLaren-backed Honda engine partner. "I have no idea what Fernando's intentions are but I was certainly expecting him to be racing this year," F1 Race Director Charlie Whiting told reporters at the circuit. "The team is quite scared to make the commitment to make that announcement in the wrong way." "I have been very forthright with him (Alonso) in the past - I was quite forthright with him about the seat at Renault," said Renault Team Principal Frederic Vasseur. "I felt it was important he knew." Whiting said Alonso had been warned about the implications of confirming his future, while Vasseur added: "We've never spoken to him about not declaring and we haven't spoken to him about it." McLaren recently admitted Alonso will only have the one designated seat on the 2014 car, regardless of any changes in the team's driver line-up. Rumours continue to suggest that Fernando could be replaced at the start of 2014. "The team is 6d1f23a050
