Under the tuition of renowned French architect Jean-Louis Ducros, Roger won both first and second prizes in the Paris Architectural Design Competition for Seacamp, Louisiana, USA. This was the beginning of the long and varied career in which he has played so important a part. The "War of the Gold and the Birch", as he calls it, was a remarkable performance on all sides, and the distinguished jury was divided, so that his appeal to France was only by the slenderest margin. After returning to New York in the early sixties, Roger became Director of the Ecole Spéciale des Travaux Publics et Industriels. His work has covered the development of cities in New York, Hong Kong, and Japan, and his projects have included over 25 skyscrapers, hotels, shopping malls, industrial buildings and private residences. In the late sixties, Roger started working for the Walt Disney company as Chief Architect of the Disneyland Resort
